Frontier and Provincial Enemies.

The late invasion of Indians is a humiliating contre-temps not only highly disagreeable to the individuals plundered, but still more disastrous to the hopes of extending our frontier, as mentioned with flattering emphasis, in Gov. Mitre's message to the Legislative Chambers.

Can it be possible that the savages with a keen spirit of the grotesque, wished to play a practical joke by running off with 300 mares at the very moment when we were ruminating the wholesome idea of taking from them 1,500 leagues of hunting-ground? Surely it will be difficult for us, when our hands are already full, to grab at more. The Spaniards say "quien mucho abarca, mala aprieta", and it is probable that General Flores will find our frontier line like an India-rubber string which extra-prolongation renders useless.

Far be it from us to insinuate that Government does not exert itself to guard the military cordon: it is enough to bear in mind that the frontier is equal to the constitution of England, and near 100,000 troopers, much less 4 or 5 regiments, would be sufficient to prevent these Belouin irruptions.

Meantime, the conclusion is obvious that we cannot hope to strengthen our frontier by extending it: but that rather we should hold our own with double vigilance, without exciting the red-men's jealousy by intruding on their traditional possessions. We wish by all means to push civilization further, but the agents we would employ should be steam, not gunpowder,—ploughshares, not bayonets,—farmers, not veterans. When this country can imitate the United States in going ahead, we may breakfast in Buenos Aires and spend the evening at our country-house on the Cordillera. Then we shall have little to think of Indians or frontier, but until steam and immigration lend us a hand our extension of the frontier is incomplete-nay almost chimerical.

Besides frontier-troubles, we have still a provincial guerilla, whose uncertain glimmer seems to indicate a prompt extinction, but which would be sufficient to cause a conflagration, if in a combustible vicinity. Happily, Peña loza's neighbours seem novise disposed to imitate his wrong-doing, but unhappily, after scores of skirmishes, he is always defeated never annihilated.

Later accounts say, as has been stated before, that the Chacho is a lonely fugitive, all his followers having vanished like mist before the rising Aurora of our military genius. Col. Rivas speaks of a hot pursuit for forty leagues, and indeed it is difficult to appreciate the obstinate perseverance of running across a strange country, to follow a fleeing enemy, as far as from Dublin to Galway. If they travel so awfully fast, we do not know when General Mitre's indult shall overtake them. Still we learn that Peñaloza has 70 men, and his fidus Achates, nicknamed Oativero, has 60 troopers. The first is gone to his old diggings, La Jarilla, and the second is surveying the heights of the Sierra San Luis. Rivas fixed his head-quarters at Salinas, but we cannot affirm that this is the identical Salinas or salt-pit where Sandes pickled his adversaries.

We expect soon to hear that the Chacho has accepted Mitre's terms through Paunece, and thus our troops may be more usefully employed at home, than running about on the Llanos of Rioja after such a Will o' the Wisp as the Brigand general.

The "Standard" to the rescue.

Success is the secret of humble felicity, and long-eat is the job offensest comes off with flying colors. It has been our fortune to get mixed up in many crooked questions, but good luck has always carried us through, and like an Isle of Man penny we may say "quocunque jeceris stabo." The Belgrano controversy about the race-course is another instance. Seeing unjust pretensions urged against the F. A. R. S. we advocated our community's right with the same impartiality as we should have supported the Argentine club, were they similarly circumstanced.

The sentence of the Belgrano Municipality is entirely based on the arguments we alleged, and couched in almost identical terms. In resisting the importunate demands of the Argentine Club, great stress is laid on the fact that the first publication of programme appeared in the "Standard" organ of English news in this country, dating April 20th 1862. The turning point, however, is the priority of contract on the part of Mr. C. A. H. S: by said document it is stipulated that the Foreigners shall be at liberty to choose any two days in Spring and in Autumn for their meeting. The days so chosen are the 29th & 30th inst., and we have no doubt that an unusual concourse will attend to testify their admiration of the fair-pay which has now, as heretofore, characterised the Foreign Amateur Racing Society.

The "Standard" will attend as a matter of course.

The Governor's Message.

Custom House Statistics.

It is satisfactory to the Government to be enabled to present to you a complete and efficient book on Custom House Statistics which may give a fair idea of our foreign commerce. It comprises the movement of our Custom Houses during the 1st half of last year (1861) and furnishes a great deal of useful information, their best recommendation being that they are true and exact in relation to official data. It shows that the value of our imports for consumption has amounted, during that period, to $235,182,000, and our exports to $143,939,000, making a total of $379,121,000.

These amounts represent only the special consumption and production of this province, according to official value. If to this be added the same products free of export duty, and not included in that sum, as well as the difference for low valuations and that which must naturally escape the fiscal vigilance, all of which cannot be estimated at less than 20 per cent, it may be seen that the special imports and exports together, during the above-mentioned six months, will amount to a real value of no less than $415,600,000, or say, approximately, $910,600,000 per annum, with an estimated population of 335,000 inhabitants.

Budget.

The Government will present, separately, the Budget of income and expenditure, with the respective taxation laws for 1863, which are already prepared. These bills are based on the laws which have ruled during the present year, the Government having forborn proposing any reforms which should not have a certain basis, on account of the proximate re-organisation of the National authorities, to whom belongs, in a great measure, this task.

The Government has fulfilled Honorable Senators and Deputies, the duty of giving an account of the state of the province during the second year of the third Constitutional period, by now having bound to reiterate the expression of its gratitude for the co-operation which you have lent it, and to make the most ardent prayer that Divine Providence, as heretofore, may enlighten your deliberations.

TRAVELS IN LA PLATA.

CHAP XIX.

The Filibuster Matute.

I became a godfather (padrino) on several occasions during my residence in Salta: the duties of this obligation are more serious than is generally the case in Europe, where it is frequently looked upon as a mere formality, and, in the course of time, entirely forgotten: here it becomes a spiritual affinity, which even extends to the parents of the child, and is valued more than a closer relationship. Amongst those to whom I became a padrino, was the daughter of Colonel Matute, a celebrated character: he was a Columbian by birth, and rose from the ranks to the majorship of his regiment—"La granaderos á caballo de la guardia de Colombia," which, for gallantry and exemplary conduct, was the most distinguished in the war of independence: he was a man of short stature, regular features, and a dark, penetrating eye. In an unguarded moment, and from feelings of resentment against his superior officer, he deserted, with part of his regiment, from the head-quarters in Cochabamba, and, after immmerable difficulties and dangers, they arrived at this town, and entered the service of the Republic. Here they remained for several weeks, and were employed in the training of troops; they subsequently formed part of an expedition which was sent against General Quiroga, one of the chiefs of the Federal party, whom they met on the plains of Tucuman, and where, after a sanguinary battle of several hours, in which they were opposed to triple their number, were completely defeated, and fled in disarray from the field of action. Matute soon reunited his dispersed band: the victorious veterans in that battle of Columbians—the famous horse-guards of Bolivar's army, now crestfallen and depressed with their recent defeat, and returned with them to the town of Salta. Most of these soldiers retired from the service, and abandoned the sword for the plough-share. Matute was appointed to a command in the rural districts, under the title of Commandant General: he married a young and interesting lady, the daughter of one of the principal families, and went with her to her estate in Rosario: there they lived happily for several months, when they became tired of a rustic life, and, availing himself of his position as a military chief, endeavoured to raise a party in his favour, for the purpose of deposing the Governor. He soon enlisted to his cause some few separate characters, who are frequently to be found in every quarter, and are ready at the back that invites them to booty. With these and a few of his soldiers, he was on the eve of executing his design, when his plot was discovered by the Governor, who, in a friendly note, requested his attendance in town. He obeyed the summons, unsuspecting the motives of his call, and was received by the Governor in a kind manner, who, after a long conversation on political subjects, and other topics of minor consideration, invited him to dinner. They sat down to table in the best of good humour: no allusions were made to the Colonel's plot: each played his part with remarkable tact, and the evening was passed in cheerful conviviality. It was their last meeting: the fore-runner of the tragedy about to be acted.

FOREIGN MISCELLANY.

Letter from Paris.

And speaking of Powers, let me write Mirès last up as one of the fallen powers of Paris. You know the Count Jules de Castellane is dead. I chronicled his dep ture from this life some months ago. By virtue of the French law of the distribution of estates, his mansion is to be sold, and the walls of Paris are covered with immense posting-bills announcing the sale at the upset price at 180,000 frcs. The private theatre of this mansion is celebrated. There Mario as Signor di Candia revealed to the world his wonderful voice, there Mme. de Lesseps first sang and she was then a wealthy young lady singing merely for pleasure; Liszt heard her and told her what real talents she possessed. She lost her whole estate soon afterwards, remembered Liszt's praise, took to the stage—you know with what success. The rooms to be two Thespian societies that played in the theatre, of one of which, the Duchesse d'Abrantes was manager, the other of which Mme. Sophie Gay was manager. There was great deal of rivalry between them, which at times became a bitter feud, which company should be the brilliant and most applauded. There Count de Morny, Count Walewsky, Mons. de Remusat Marshal de MeMahon, Count d'Orsay, Mons. Latour Maubourg, and many another person since famous, played in private theatricals. All the most distinguished people of Paris have been guests of the house, for Count de Castellane was of one of the best families of France; it furnished in old times above a hundred grand dignitaries to the Order of Malta, it gave Arles two Archbishops; other French dioceses eight bishops, and the Faubourg Saint Germain reckoned him "one of us." This mansion possesses the most splendid dining-room to be found in Paris, and its drawing-rooms are decorated by Voillemont and Cicéri. One of the dining-room windows, which is formed of one plate-glass looks into the—stable! which is a magnificent equestrian boudoir, which was lighted up when there was company. This was one of the last hereditary mansions still open to hospitality; there are few now reminining, indeed I scarcely know but two, the Duke de Lognes! and the Duke de la Rochefoucald—Llancourt! and I believe the former is doomed to destruction to make way for some new boulevard! Seventy years have swept away from the face of Paris almost all vestiges of the old French families.

I read it is even worse in the provinces, especially in Normandy, which used to be distinguished for the number and easy fortunes of noblemen, every family is extinct. Of a truth there are more families extinguished annually in France than in any other European country. This is partly owing to immorality, partly owing to the laws which frown on families, and partly owing to the waste of human life in camps. I do not say on battle fields—for the Destroying Angel swings his scythe less on the battle than on the untried field.

A dozen friends of Mons. Victor Hugo left here a few days ago to spend two days with him at Brussels. He read to them a portion of his new novel, Les Miserables. The Countess Alfred de Vigny was so much touched by a chapter of it, she was obliged to leave the room as the vision of her sole. Mons. Hugo's son is preparing a dramatized version of it for the Ambigu, it will be played there next winter,

I mentioned to you Rossini's visit to the Grand Opera at the general rehearsal of L'Etoile de Messine and the ovation given him. Do you remember that the orchestra played to honor him the overture to William Tell. The next day Rossini sent for the leader of the orchestra and corrected a very important mistake which existed in the score and had existed there since 1829. Nobody's ears had detected it. Rossini's ear discovered it the other night for the first time. Isn't it rather odd? Speaking of music let me mention that Boileau's piano—the instrument on which he composed his last opera, Les Deux Nuits, was sold at Havre recently for forty francs. The present owner would not sell it for ten thousand francs.

Boston Evening Gazette

PECULIARITIES OF COMPOSERS.—Sacchini could not write a passage unless his mistress was at his side, and his cats, whose gracefulness he so much admired, were playing about him.

Pasiello composed in bed. It was between the sheets that he planned the Barber of Seville, the Molinara, and so many other chef d'œuvres of ease and gracefulness.

Haydn, like Buffon, thought it necessary (or assisting down to compose) to have his hair put in the same nice order as if he were going out, and dressed himself with a degree of magnificence. Frederic II, had sent him a diamond ring, and Haydn confessed that often, when he sat down to his piano, if he had forgotten to put on his ring he could not summon a single idea. The paper on which he composed must be the finest and whitest possible; and he wrote with so much neatness and care, that the best copyist could not have surpassed him in the regularity and clearness of his characters. It is true that his notes had such little heads and slender tails that he very properly to call them his spider's legs.

PRIMT SERMON.—The following sermon, if it does not the merit of originality, if nothing else

"Man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upward." (Job, v. 7.)

1st. The children, I shall divide my discourse on this text into three heads.

1st. The coming of man into the world.

2nd. The career of man in the world.

3rd. The departure of man from the world.

His entrance into the world is in nakedness.

His career in the world is full of sorrow and care.

His departure from the world will lead him none knows whither.

To conclude, if we do well here, we shall be well hereafter.

I couldn't tell you any more if I were to preach for a twelve-month. No politics about that.

Walking on the Water.

On Dec. 21st, some interesting experiments were made on the Potomac, near the Washington Navy Yard, by the engineer corps of the New York 15th regiment, with pontoon and rope bridges, during, which one of the engineers walked upon the surface of the river at pleasure by the aid of tin floats, each about four feet long, shaped like a boat, and attached to the feet as skates. With the assistance of a paddle the operator can walk the water like a thing of life," and carry a line across a stream, by means of which a firing bridge, made of ropes, may be drawn across, enabling infantry to go over in silence and safety. Provided with this apparatus a regiment would find a creek or considerable stream no impediment to an advance.

A correspondent of the Journal says that "the invention, by which a man can walk on the water by aid of boats or floats fastened to the feet in the manner of snow shoes, is a Boston one. The inventor, a ship carpenter, perfected his invention during his leisure hours in the winter of 1858, in a little back building in High street place in this city, tested it in the lock in that vicinity, and had it patented. This correspondent saw him walk on the water at the rate of three miles an hour."

FASHIONABLE CURE FOR DEMOCRATIC DISORDERS. — Whatever may be said of the difficulty of conquering the southern states, there can be no doubt of the power of the north to keep up the war in one fashion or another. With, then, is the alternative to which we are to look, when conquest is impossible; when separation is impossible; when union, in the form we have seen it, is impossible; when success on either side is impossible; when peace is impossible; when war itself, as it is now carried on, is impossible—when everything is impossible, except something that does not come under any of the heads, and that is beyond all present reckoning or reasonable expectation? What is this but to know that the federation itself is impossible? The principle has been tried and found wanting. The southern states will not submit to the worst of all bondages—a tyrant majority. The northern states will not compromise, nor conciliate, nor win by any method. So the appeal is to war, and the war, it is admitted on both sides, must work itself out to its legitimate results. The question is no longer whether the north will conquer the southgbut what the war will lead to, and what state of things will supervene upon the present. The most favoring diviner nothing in the prospect but guerilla warfare, anarchy, and de-station. This is simply to admit that, the statesman having failed, the cause is now in the hands of the soldier.

But it is more; it is in the hands of the soldier who sees the dark end of federation instead of its bright beginning. This is not the age in which a French monarchy is breaking up or a republic is inaugurated, but in which a French empire has been restored and re-established, it is an age in which strongmonarchy is the fashionable cure for democratic disorder. Europe has just congratulated Italy on the acquisition of a monarchy, instead of the federation which philosophers wanted for her, instead, of the independent states which lately existed, instead of the theocracy which Rome professes to give, instead of Mazzini's republic. Two western states of Europe have at least the credit of offering Mexico a constitutional monarchy instead of the republican constitution which has had no existance except in alternate anarchy adespotism. This is an age of reaction, for which democracy has to thank itself. The dictator, the emperor, or the king, is everywhere superseding the forms of the consul or the "open scheme of the longivere." Where we are told that everything else is impossible in America, and that politics are absorbed in the chances of war and the genius of the commanders, then, indeed, we see the beginning of the end. But that end is not the one desired by either north and south, nor even by us who look on. It cannot be for our interest that a military adventurer should possess the finest regions of North America, even though that were better than anarchy But such is the fate towards which the great American commonwealth seem now drifting. It is possible. That is enough when every thing else is confessed to be impossible.

A model assurance society.

Prospectus.

In the united Kingdom there are about thirty millions of us pushing and jostling each other, each striving to get the best standing upon this little atice of the great ball of earth; twirling and slashing through space at a terrific pace—shooting like lightning around its course—at one season plunging us into the tropical heats of summer, at the other leaving us in the chilling frosts of winter; some of us clustering, upon the mountains, or spread out in the valleys, or stived up in cities & towns, earth-bleached like celery, or smoke-dried as haddocks; on one side scattered in driblets, on the other fenced in in dense masses; but all running, driving, steaming, coaching, railing, hurrying, scurrying; some going ahead others dropping astern—swimming and sinking—producing, or smashing, crushing—blowing up or blowing down—knocking up or being knocked down, or pitched over neck and heels together—at one time in an ague freezing up the life streams; at another in a fever, burning up the very vitals —blown hither skelter by strong winds, and drenched or drowned by the treacherous waters—first one thing, and then another—at one time being all things to all men, at an other time being nothing to nobody or yourself either—plowing every point in view, and assuming all kinds of land for us—bartering and bargaining—cheating and being cheated—undermining and being undermined—appeasing or being appeased—singled, smuggled bargained, umbrovelled, and humbugged.

CUSTOM HOUSE. A decision has been given by the Minister in a controversy between the Custom House and an importer. This decision will serve as a basis for future guidance as follows.

According to the Custom House tariff so much is charged per dozen flasking ordinary size, but as other flasks have been imported containing a greater quantity, the rule will now be enlarged by adding "larger sizes in proportion."

We judge that it would answer better to say so much for flasks of.... pints, according, to what we may doubts, the quantity contained in each.

SHEEP—SHEEP—SHEEP

Important to Sheep Farmers.

A sure cure for the Scab in Sheep.

The undersigned has the pleasure announcing to the Wool Growers of this country, that he has now received a large quantity of the celebrated South Down Sheep Wash.

This valuable preparation is highly recommended for its safety, convenience, utility and economy. It is a concentrated extract, one pound of which is equal to ten pounds of tobacco, retaining in this compact form all the properties of the raw material, at the same time saving the very disagreeable and tedious operation of preparing the wash as is usually practised in this country. The only labor required with the article now offered to the public, is to stir the paste into the quantity of water needed for the Sheep that are intended to be dipped. This Sheep Wash is highly recommended and extensively used by the wool Growers of Australia and South Africa. The Samples that have been used by some of the Estancieros of this Country, have given the most perfect satisfaction, and are recommended by them as the most efficacious remedy ever used in this country; for further particulars apply either personally or by letter to C. S. BOWERS.

At Messrs. James Bell & Co. (Calle Defensa, esquina Moreno.)

Important Testimonial.

Buenos Ayres, March 28 1862.

Dear Sir:

Having used your South Down Sheep Wash, on my flocks, I take pleasure in recommending it to all Wool Growers of this country, as the most efficacious remedy I have ever used for diseases in Sheep, and especially for removing the Scab.

I have tried many eminent remedies both here and in Scotland, and have found nothing that has given such perfect satisfaction as the South Down Sheep Wash.

Trusting that the merits of this valuable preparation may become more fully known, and earnestly commending it to the attention of all those interested in sheep,

I remain, yours, &c,
NINIAN JOHNSTONE.

To Mr. Chas. J. Bowers.
